One of those hotels catering to singles is the Wyndham Grand Rio Mar Resort & Spa in Puerto Rico, which invites those traveling alone to meet with other guests seaside at the Tiki Bar's daily happy hour. And at the Zemi Beach House Resort & Spa in Anguilla, each solo hotel guest has access to a personal guide throughout his or her stay who suggests fun social activities on the property such as cocktail parties, communal dinners and rum tastings.

While these programs are meant for more impromptu and casual meetings with other solo travelers, an app named MissTravel, released over the summer, helps match its members around the world who are seeking travel companions. Complete strangers can organize and book trips together before ever meeting.

"Just like any other dating app, our main goal is to create romantic connections between our members," Hannahmae Dela Cruz, public relations manager for MissTravel told us. "Traveling is a great way to fall in love and a pivotal test of a relationship. When we go on holiday we're often taken out of our comfort zone, in an unfamiliar place experiencing situations we often do not encounter. How we deal with these situations with a partner is a sure way of determining compatibility. Many of our successful users have gotten married and started families together."
